GEORGE DIXON RESIGNS LOYOLA FOOTBALL POST

It is with regret that the Department of Physical Education and Athletics at Loyola College has accepted the resignation of Head Football Coach George Dixon. Dixon, a former Schenley Award winner as a Montreal Alouette, is leaving his Loyola post to devote more time to his expanding business interests.

"I'm going to miss Loyola and the fine boys I have had the opportunity to coach, but in fairness to them resigning is the only logical step to take, since I could no longer give the football program my complete attention," he stated.

In his first season at Loyola in 1968, Dixon coached the Warriors to an undefeated regular season, and enjoyed an overall three year record of sixteen wins and eight losses. He had the satisfaction of seeing one of his players, Brian Marcil, make it to the C.F.L. with the Calgary Stampeders, and three more of his protégés trying out this season; Claude Beaudry, Andy Malolepszy, and Dwayne Dudgeon.

Loyola Athletic Director, Ed Enos, commented, "We appreciate Dixon's contribution to the growth in the status of our football program, and wish him great success in his new business venture." Enos added that Dixon will be continuing his relationship with the college on a part-time basis as a scout and adviser.

Applications are now being screened for the opening, and the Department expects to name a new mentor by July 15th.

Returning members of the coaching staff are Tony Pajacskowski, Doug Daigneault, and Peter Reginbald.
